

Architects book out colour course

Since the announcement by the Natural Colour System (NCS) that architects are able to earn two full Continuing Professional Development (CPD) points the courses have been booked out. "I have been receiving great feedback expressing the valuable insight into colour they have gained and how NCS - a system designed by architects for architects - can enhance their design implementation processes," says Lisa Taylor, SADC distributor for NCS and convener of the courses.

The Basic Colour course is a full day seminar which aims at giving the participant a better understanding of colour, colour specification and of the Natural Colour System.

The South African Institute of Architects has assessed and validated the Basic Colour course as a Category one CPD Activity which carries two CPD credits. For more information, visit www.ncscolour.co.za

Intelligent video analytics

Porsche have implemented loimage intelligent video analytics to secure the perimeter of its car showroom in Sunninghill, Gauteng. The perimeter is approximately 650m in length and surrounds the car showroom and dealership, the contents of which are of an extremely high value. Porsche needed an accurate and reliable intrusion detection system and loimage intelligent video analytics was the solution of choice.

loimage provides high-performance video encoders and cameras with built-in video analytics, designed and packaged for simplicity. Recognised as the world's market leader for intelligent cameras and encoders since 2005 with over 37% of the market, loimage operates in 35 countries through a network of more than 100 partners.
